Warning of a Minister of the Gospel.

From the New Orleans Herald, May Sth.] On Tuesday, while the police reinforcements were mustering at the First District precinct and "Governor" Kellogg was in attendance to witness their preparations and fire their hearts for the fray, a tall, well dressed, clerical looking personage presented himself at the door of the station, which was guarded by two Metropolitans with muskets. The gentleman inquired of the sentinels if he could see Governor Kellogg. They crossed their muskets and told him "No, he could not enter." OERTEL & MARSHALL, I tell her my simple story, that for twenty years I have never allowed beer in my kitchen, or reckoned beer money in my servants' wages. They must either accept the alternative and drink water-as I do-or give up my place. They never have given up my place, and ours is still one of the very few houses where there is no trouble with servants. But when I suggested these facts, she shook her head. She had not courage to commence such a retorso. Yet, reform does not commence, it must be from the upper and not the lower ranks; also, I firmly believe, with women rather
